

Dan Marrone Wins National Award 10/31/06

APICS Announces Volunteer Leadership Award Winners at 2006 APICS International Conference and Exposition

Alexandria, VA (October 31, 2006) APICS The Association for Operations Management today announced the winners of the association's three prestigious service awards -- the Voluntary Service Award, the Student Chapter Mentor Award, and the APICS Honorary Member Award.

Daniel S. Marrone, Ph.D., CFPIM, CIRM, C.P.M., received the APICS Student Chapter Mentor Award. Marrone is a professor at Farmingdale State University of New York and has been an APICS member for almost 20 years. Currently, Marrone serves as president of the APICS Long Island Chapter. Even though he has earned seven college degrees, Marrone credits his APICS education with enabling him to master and teach the varied disciplines within the operations management body of knowledge.

Marrone has incorporated many elements of the APICS body of knowledge into the core curriculum for Farmingdale State University of New York's Bachelor of Science program in management technology, and he has mentored more than 100 student internships relating to APICS topics. Finally, in 1995 he established an APICS Student Affiliate Chapter at Farmingdale State University of New York.
